

February feature —

New Thought
for a New Millennium
Twelve Powers for the 21st Century
Michael Maday, editor

Twelve renowned authors share from their deepest personal beliefs and their most innovative, exciting visions of the future. Essays by

- |                                |                                 |
|--------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| ❖ Robert Brumet         | ❖ Christopher Jackson    |
| ❖ Eric Butterworth      | ❖ Barbara King           |
| ❖ James Dillet Freeman  | ❖ Rosemary Fillmore Rhea |
| ❖ Joan Gattuso          | ❖ Jim Rosemergy          |
| ❖ Rosemary Ellen Guiley | ❖ Bernie Siegel, M.D.    |
| ❖ Barbara Marx Hubbard  | ❖ Sir John Templeton     |

“The book represents, I believe, about the most complete general overview of the Unity School of Christianity's distinctive philosophy likely to be found in any single text. Its subtitle, "Twelve Powers for the 21st Century" expresses the book's basic layout: A description of each of the twelve forces inherent in all of us (love, faith, understanding, wisdom, imagination, zeal, strength, will, life, power, renunciation and order), which were, in the view of Unity's founders, Charles and Myrtle Fillmore, all brought to perfection and perfectly expressed in Jesus Christ, the perfect man. Each topic is linked to an apostle felt to be representative of it, and reflected on, and shown to be involved with all the others. . . . The collection of authors are all persons of accomplishment (James Dillet Freeman, a man with two of his poems on the moon, is an example) who do a good job of reflecting in short pieces on words that carry such wide meanings, in the course of which they lay a case for one of the most radical new interpretations of Christianity imaginable. These people are downright fiercely positive in their outlook, a thing refreshing enough in itself. Anyone familiar with older Christian doctrine owes it to themselves to take a look at this and be amazed at what some folks can manage to do with it. This one will never be recommended reading at the Vatican, but any Christian with a sharp wit and upbeat outlook ought to take a look in these pages.” – Independent Publisher (as quoted at Amazon.com)

Available from the Christ Unity Bookstore — “lower level” in the Unity Café.